ARE WE INTO BLACK MAGIC ? The question has been put to us with such forthright simplicity that we feel it merits an answer equally devoid of obfuscation. The answer is, quite simply- No. Aside from the casual delight in all things evil and unsettling typical of our generation, our forays around the outskirts of infernal necromancy bring us somewhere short of the determination "into". Our interest lies elsewhere. Our "into" falls somewhere to the front of those charmingly antiquated practices. Here, in the birth pains of the computer age, we can distinguish beneath the cries the murmur of a language at once primordial and new. It is the language the universe speaks to itself, which we are beginning to hear with infantile comprehension. It speaks at the horizon where traditional mathematics fail, at the intersection of parallel lines, where $1 + 1 = 0$. It is where we live and die. The Path through this place which we are, all of us, "into", has come to us with the wrong name::::::

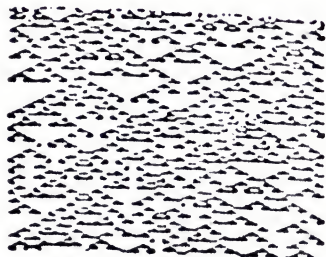

black math

This name, and the artikulation of its axiomatic principles are the work of the great Scottish mathematician, JOHN KANE (1861- 1954, cover photo by Joel-Peter Witkin). Called by Aldous Huxley "the most frightening thinker I have ever met", his tragic career reached a peak of cogency in 1913, with the publication of his Principium Negativum. This massive 3- volume work expounds "the 'power' of 'negative' 'thinking' " and extends its domain beyond the originary mathematico-logical field into what Kane ironically referred to as the 'real' 'world'. Denounced by Alfred Whitehead as "a perverse revival of alchemical thinking", Kane's work nevertheless generated considerable controversy and a following on both sides of the academic fence.

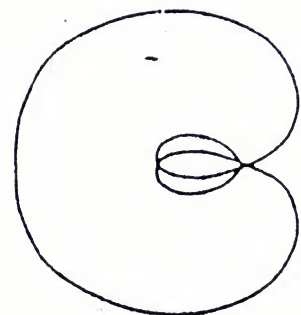

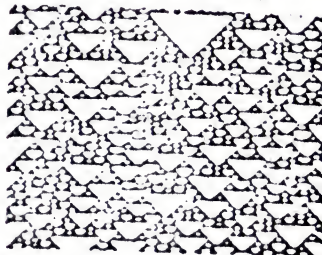

The decline of his mental health severely tarnished his already fragile reputation as his ideas left for higher ground, culminating in a dramatic public declaration that he had literally turned himself inside out in an attempt to eliminate the "gaze in place benaeth the skin" which had resulted from contact with beings he would refer to only as "the Headbreakers". A series of violent attacks led to his confinement in the Magdalen Mental Mercyseat (1921), where he was eventually lobotomized (an operation he tragically attributed to the Headbreakers), remaining there for over thirty years until his death in a freak gas-fire at the age of 93. This fire destroyed the bulk of his unpublished writings, which included reams of black math, voluminous diaries of dire warnings, fiction, and dramatic fragments. In his twilight years he was perhaps most famous for his "anti-chess" game, which ended in a stalemate with all pieces in starting position.

His Black Math is currently enjoying a resurgence as as contemporary non-Euclidean thought verifies more and more of his vaticini signi. Reproduced here for the first time is a sample of his unpublished manuscript, as well as illustrative excerpts from Principium Negativum.

- GM $\leftrightarrow$ E(e), by the definition of GM.
- $\leftrightarrow \sim Pf(\text{Sub}(e))$, because E(x) is the property $\sim Pf(\text{Sub}(x))$.
- $\leftrightarrow \sim Pf(\#E(e))$, by the definition of Sub.
- $\leftrightarrow \#E(e)$ is not the code number of a sentence provable from the theory M, by the definition of Pf.
- $\leftrightarrow \#GM$ is not the code number of a sentence provable from the theory M, by the definition of GM.
- $\leftrightarrow GM$ is not provable from the theory M.

The point of all this is that GM is constructed so that if it is true, then it is not provable by M, and if it is false, then it is provable by M.

known as the 'bipolarity' of Nature.
The duality in this case is that experience is split into two distinct domains, on one hand, the immediate and the quantitative and on the other, the qualitative dimensionality that enters into the calculus of physiology.
The latter - the so called 'primary qualitative'

With that one can begin to discern the various particles of mysticism so that thru the subjective experience N-dimensional Virtuality can be attained. ~~How far?~~ ^{the} ~~see the~~ ^{significance} ~~is~~

The significance of this truth, you may find surprisingly enough And from the most unsuspecting quarters - surprise is that the modern mind tends to build a notion of disembodiment in which the question arises - is the God vacuum the bloodline of the subjective experience And the N-dimensional Virtuality, the Holy Grail of the personal odyssey thru the dark waters of egoistic hedonism? And is it not a greater glory to blow open the doors of consciousness And find that bloodline filled, extending the boundaries beyond the senseless and shallow ideas of some existentialist who say the world of existence, and those along with it absorb?
